Erica Timothy is an emerging talent in contemporary ceramics with her work increasingly sought after by serious collectors and galleries.

Erica's ceramics are intuitive, sculptural and organic with a narrative and natural beauty. Her work displays the influence of Anish Kapoor, Barbara Hepworth, and Henry Moore, combined with the strong inspiration from nature: from the round-bottomed vessels of West Africa which influenced her 'fondo-redondo' and her 'nubia & saami' series to the fabulously extravagant horns of antelopes, cattle and sheep which led to her early series of horned vessels.

Erica is a qualified practicing landscape architect, and architectural technician, who has recently begun to devote more time to her pots which have for so long been admired and coveted by all who viewed them.

The demand for her pots led her to establish a new studio in Bath where her unique pieces are hand crafted.

Erica engages and enhances the craft form of ceramics, challenging its second-class status within the world of fine arts, to explore witty and thought-provoking themes that resonate.

Erica works intuitively. There is no imposed or pre-imagined order to her work, instead, she allows the work to develop as she creates, continually experimenting and refining her skills and ideas as she progresses - thereby achieving an organic form that lives as a beautiful piece of art.
